SUBJECT Lottery Winners

BOB McBRIDE: Things are getting hot down there at the lottery drawing. We're ready to go back to Larry Shainman not at the scene. Larry?

LARRY SHAINMAN: Bob, you see three people up there on the stage. One of them is about to win $100,000 and the other two are about to become the millionaires. We'll let you see it live and then we'll explain it as it happens.

[Clip of the lottery drawing.]

SHAINMAN: The name they call will win $100,000 and the other two will be the millionaires.

[Clip of lottery drawing.]

SHAINMAN: Okay. The lady on the far left has just won a million dollars and the young woman on the far right, now hugging the mayor, she has just won a million dollars. Let me tell you who they are: Sandra Hilton, 38 years old, a clerk-typist at the Department of Health and Human Services. She makes $15,000 a year in that job. She just won a million dollars. She's got the red cap around her head. The other winner is Sandy Jacola. She's 19 years old. She's on the left of the mayor. She's wearing the striped dress. She's on the right of your screen. Her father is really the ticket winner, but he is over on a secret assignment for the State Department overseas. They couldn't get word to him, so his daughter is here tonight. When he gets back from wherever he is, he's a millionaire.

There are your two lucky winners in the second DC instant lottery, Sandra Hilton, on the left of your screen, and Sandy Jacola. That's Sandra Hilton you're looking at there. Again, she's a clerk-typist with the Department of Health and Human Services, 38 years old, married and four children. And the other winner is Sandy Jacola. Her father is the winner. He's overseas with the State Department. They can't tell us where he is. When he gets back he's a millionaire. Those are your million dollar winners, Bob and Jim.

McBRIDE: All right. Thank you, Larry Shainman. You got those names: Sandra Hilton and Sandy Jacola standing in her far -- for her father. And Jim has a story about her father's boss coming up next.

JIM VANCE: That's not a bad way to celebrate a Friday night.

VANCE: We thought you might like to talk to a millionaire.

McBRIDE: (Laughter) Who wouldn't? Looks like Sandra Hilton, is that right?

Rick Young at the drawing.

RICK YOUNG: Yes, gentlemen, we do have one of D.C.'s newest millionaires. She is 38-year-old Sandra Hilton from Northwest D.C. She's a typist with the Health and Human Services Department.

Sandra, the question is how do you feel right now being D.C.'s newest millionaire?

SANDRA HILTON: Excited. Nervous.

YOUNG: It was a pretty big moment out there when they picked up those names. Did you feel when you came down to the last three people you were going to be one those one million dollar winners?

HILTON: No I didn't. No.

YOUNG: Not at all?

HILTON: No.

YOUNG: A lot of people are going to ask you, probably tomorrow. What are you going to do with all that money?

HILTON: I haven't decided yet.

YOUNG: You haven't decided?

I think gentlemen she's still in a state of shock, so the thing is we'll probably be talking to her tomorrow and again one of the winners in the million dollar lottery is Sandra Hilton from Northwest D.C.

Back to the studio.

McBRIDE: Thank you, Rick.

VANCE: She's not in a state of shock, man. Sandra's just cool, that's all.

That's the coolest millionaire I've ever seen in my life. And I think that's wonderful.

McBRIDE: And the other one was a Mr. Jacola who works for the State Department. His daughter, Sandy was standing in for him because he's on an overseas assignment right now.

So, we will hear more from them tomorrow and on Monday too.
